

The Society

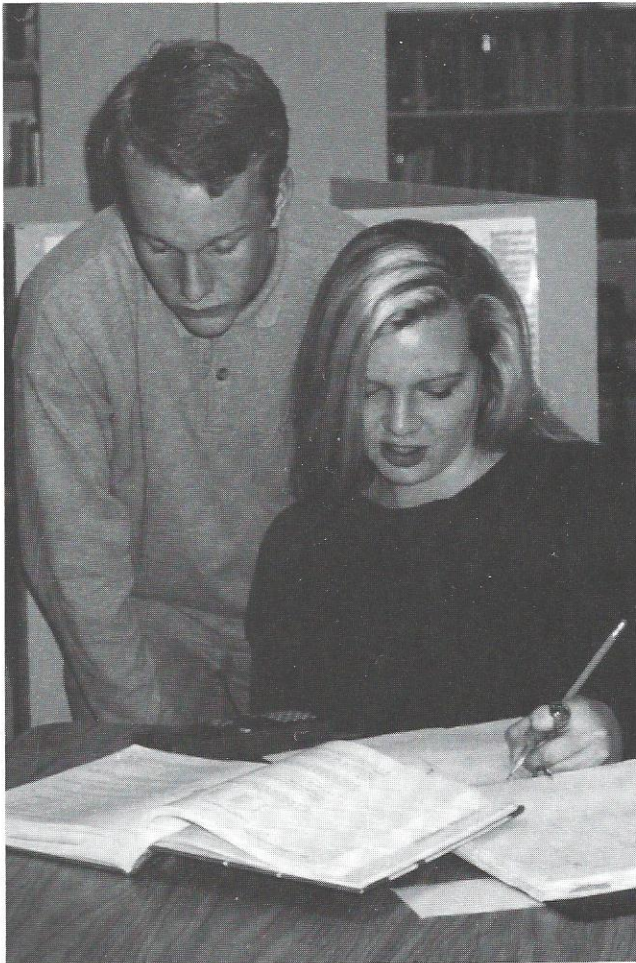

Best Of The Best

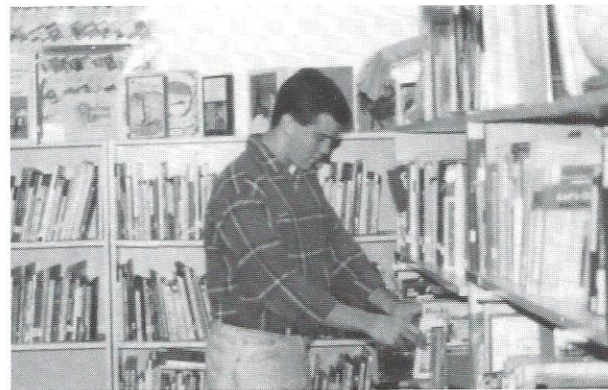

To any sophomore, junior, or senior, being inducted into the National Honor Society is a privilege. "Being inducted into the NHS was a great honor, but I was really nervous when my candle wouldn't light," said Kimberly Smith. Students in grades 10-12 are eligible if they have maintained a B average or better. Dedication, leadership, and honor are just a few of the qualities needed to be an outstanding member.

This year the National Honor Society took on a new duty. Every member was required to work in the library as often as possible. "I learned a lot about the library, like where the books go," said Jamie Floyd, "but I was also helping Mrs. Brightwell." The NHS, headed by Betty Geohring, worked hard and showed true dedication.

Jason Strickland carefully organizes the books. This is a new project which helps Mrs. Brightwell out tremendously.

Being a part of the NHS means helping others. Patrick Ritter and Jennifer Mixson work on Pre-Cal, one of their toughest classes.

Kimberly Smith lights a candle as President Craig White looks on. The lighting of the candle is a tradition of the NHS that symbolizes honor.
