

She received a degree in journalism from the University of Georgia, and promptly dashed off to Palestine. The title of this up-and-coming best-seller is Living to be Two Hundred.

Bessie Hoff is the only girl of the class who has married. Her star beams and twinkles as we hear of her golden-haired twins, Albert and Alberta, and her blacked-eyed Susan. Isaac, her dashing and handsome husband is none other than the boss she so tremblingly had an interview with for her first job.

And who does this next star represent?? Why, its none other than Wilton Hoff. We always knew he'd do something big. Well, just look at him--this is a good one--yes, he's really something big, especially in comparison to the work he is doing. He is manager and head-trainer of a flea show.

What about the neon signaling from Star No. 8? Maree Muckenfuss advertises, "Until you try my cooking, your best meal is yet to come." Keeping up hopes that the old saying, "The way to a man's heart is through his stomach," still holds true, Maree is still in the cafeteria business. Folks must always have something to talk about, but listen to this one--They say, that pilot from Eastern Airlines in Atlanta flies down every day to try to persuade her to become??????

Now look at this next star jumping around fit to kill! It is in honor of Doris Nathan who is really a professional horse rider. She rides bareback, sitting backward, standing on her hands and can do any other sort of trick riding. There is talk that she plans to join Claris and Bette with Ringling Brothers' Circus.

The next star tells of Blanche Redman, Blanche went to college, got rich quick, and is now teaching school at Cottageville High. She has such a gay time rushing around attending all the parties that she is late to school nearly every day
