FORENSIC COUNCIL

The debating team is governed by the Forensic Council, which handles the budget and schedules of the team. The men on the council are those who have shown special interest in debating, and they work in conjunction with the faculty committee on debates. Bill Summers served as the president of the council for 1942. Jim McCrary was vice-president, and Fred Morton acted as debate manager.

Eight debaters were divided into two groups, one for the northern tour and one for the southern tour. On the northern trip Bill Summers, Jesse Wooten, Jim Crooks, and Fred Morton met Washington and Lee, Hampden-Sydney, William and Mary, and Haverford. Don Bell, Ed Hipp, Jim McCrary, and Priestly Conyers debated against the teams of Centre, Sewanee, Birmingham-Southern, University of Alabama, and Agnes Scott on the southern trip. The three subjects for this year's debates were "Resolved: That the Eight Churchill-Roosevelt Principles Should Be Established and Maintained after the War; Resolved: That the Government Should Control by Law All Labor Unions; and Resolved: That Capitalism Should Go After the War."

The Forensic Council also has charge of forming a freshman debating team. This year the freshman team had no debates at other individual schools, but went to the South Atlantic Forensic Tournament in Hickory, N. C. Freshmen debaters were Grayson Tucker, Haywood Brinegar, John Sherrill, and Beall Rodgers.
