

AT THE FIJI HOUSE

Off to a good start with sixteen pledges wearing the white star in their lapels after rush week, the Fijis of Delta Kappa plunged into building a brick terrace and barbecue pit in the rear of the fraternity house. The tremendous crimson and white spider in the Homecoming decorations snared third place in the judge's opinion, and in the figure at the Friday night formal the chapter was represented by Walter Wooten and Tony Darby. Not only at Homecoming was the Fiji hut the rendezvous of many lovely lasses and their Phi Gam dates, but also early in December when the fraternity held its annual fall dinner dance. Soon came the traditional Christmas party with more festivities and a play presented by the pledge class. When Christmas holidays had become only a pleasant memory and exams were nothing more than a period eagerly to be forgotten, Midwinter dances loomed into the foreground and were responsible for one of the finest week-ends of the school year. Again Brother Walter Wooten was in the figure, and the alternate was Dan Hodges. Strictly stag was the annual Norris Pig Dinner, held early in February in Charlotte, at which over twenty alumni and all the brothers—including the newly initiated men who had successfully passed through their pledge training period—paid homage to the golden-brown boar. At this banquet Tom Findlay was awarded the Hoxie Thompson ring for showing the best pledge spirit, and Bob McMullen received the T. W. Lingle scholarship ring. Soon afterwards the chapter elected Miss Mary Katherine Becker, of Chattanooga, Tennessee, as fraternity sponsor, and just before spring holidays the Fijis were guests of Duke University's Delta Gamma sorority at a cabin party near Durham. After graduation exercises in June four of the Delta Kappa seniors will receive their gold bars when they join the army.
