

2003: Not Just

Laura Swenson, a short stories writer said, "For some, life lasts a short while, but the memories it holds last forever." This year has not been just another year. Forty-five of us will leave and travel on to make new memories, but we will never forget the ones we left behind. 2003 has been a year of making new friends, making the relationships we have stronger, and making everyone around us proud of what we have accomplished. Dorchester Academy has taught all of its students to be proud of who they are and always work with each other. The memories of hanging out at the football games cheering our team to victory no matter what, dancing away at the school dances or prom, and hanging out after school will live on in our lives forever.
