

John C. Calhoun Academy offers many extracurricular activities to its students. Involvement is essential and each activity, in its own way, prepares the student for life. Becoming a member of a team, whether it is an athletic team, school band, or science club gives the students a chance to work together. They learn to share ideas, develop attitudes, and get along with fellow classmates.

Everyone knows no matter how much time and effort is poured into an activity, it must be backed by enthusiasm, pride, and support. In sports the "good of the team" is stressed and the goal is always a fair game well-played. Whether the players experience a win or a defeat, at J.C.C.A. they always know they're backed by loyal fans. Students also take pride in marching in the Christmas parade or seeing their newspaper in print. Whatever interest a person decides to pursue, he can only be asked to give his best. Extracurricular activities have a unique place at John C. Calhoun and play an important role in helping each student mature into an involved citizen.

(Above) Randy Addison willingly dedicates his time to paint Clark Hiott's face for the annual Halloween carnival.

(Left) Joey Ritter watches with mixed emotions as the game ends.