

Hats Off To Teachers

Teachers are a rare breed. It takes someone special to teach a class of students all day, give a sigh of relief at the final bell, rush to get records in order for a parent conference, and then dash off to correct all those test papers. Students at John C. Calhoun are fortunate to have such a dedicated faculty.

The Academy boasts an exceptional academic program, not only because of students who are willing to learn, but also because of a faculty that is willing to go the extra mile to insure that the students make the most of their opportunities. Each teacher wants nothing but the best from his students, and most importantly they're a solid figure for the students to look up to and admire.

Many of these exceptional men and women give extra time to help students get the WARHAWK out on time, prepare a Thursday night radio broadcast, referee a powder-puff game, sell tickets to athletic events, or encourage a student to finally hit that hard b flat. Our "hats go off" to these people who take young boys and girls and through their influence and leadership instill in them pride, confidence, and respect for themselves and others.

(Top right) Mrs. Sylvia Warren helps her new student prepare for lunch.

(Left) Mr. Scott Hartshorn instructs his Physics class on the proper technique for experimenting with pendulums.

