

A couple of students discuss the latest news before the first bell for school.

"Was that the first bell?"
"I don't know. It may have been the tardy bell."

Thus the day began, as the last few students straggled to their homeroom class to finish writing last night's homework. First period, the teachers began their lectures just as they did every other day of the year. With the exception of occasional days when activity periods were held for the exciting pep rallies and special events, school days at John C. were fairly predictable.

Hurrying from class to class, students grabbed a few moments to talk to friends or to sneak a snack from their lunch. Then — on to another class. Between 11:30 and 1:00, students enjoyed relaxing on the picnic tables, eating their lunch. This time was spent making plans for weekends, catching up on gossip, and cramming for the "killer" test next period.

Could one of these be the new Miss J.C.C.A.? Unfortunately, it's only Ward Ulmer, Pat Harmon, and Jimmy Hiott dressed up for the pep rally.
