

The People

One big happy family," is a way to describe John C. Calhoun Academy. Though we may be small in size, we are big in heart. School is where most friendships begin and here at John C. the students have a very close relationship with one another.

Someone to share your secrets, good times and bad. Someone to talk on the phone with late at night til your parents force you to do your homework. Someone to take trips with up and down Jefferies on a Saturday night. Someone you trust. These are just some of the many things we depend upon as friends. But friends do not have to try to be friends — it just happens.

That We Call Friends

Some of the students stop to catch up on the latest gossip before school.

During break, the sophomore girls discuss their weekend plans.

What are friends for but to help with homework.

What a better time to begin a friendship then kindergarten.
