

The fourth grade's outlook and prospective of life matured greatly. These students studied about the Native American Indian's life. They then built projects to show what they had learned.

When they weren't studying the Indians they were building volcanoes for science. They also went to see the Nutcracker Ballet in Charleston. But the highlight of the year was the singing of Christmas carols at the parent's program.

These fourth graders take a break from their school work to give us a big smile.

Before class begins Leceacia Cromer makes sure she has everything needed for the long day ahead.

Jennifer Beach displays her social studies project to the class.

