

Editor's Note

As the year progressed, uncertainty filled my mind. I was made to wonder about the welfare of other students and teachers. The rocky roads of life were certainly opened to all at RHS this year.

My message to all has been to strive to succeed. There have been those who chose not to listen, but I believe that someone heard what I had to say. I have tried to show hot-headed Freshmen that there are better ways of dealing with conflicts and problems. I've found that the Sophomores, in trying to find a real identity, were the most distant from others. The Juniors seemed to have almost realized the importance of hard work. Most of the Seniors are now beginning to realize that "Life ain't no crystal stair." All have come to know that nothing, not even life itself, is guaranteed.

The one thing that I want is to be a light to someone, just to let them know that they must prepare for tomorrow. Living in a country distressed by war compels me to prepare others as well as myself for the future. We are the world. We are the future.

Realizing that there is no time for us to be disagreeable, we should strive to excel and not to equal. To those who still must travel the part of the road that I have completed, I say, be strong. Believe in yourself and your own ideals. Set goals that will make you a better person. Consider that life is only what you make it.
