The Man Who Came To Dinner

Did you accept your invitation? You were invited, you know, to attend a very special dinner party. Yes, I'm speaking of this year's Senior Play. If you weren't there, you missed a great treat. This hilarious comedy was, as one senior put it, "the most."

Mr. Van Laningham directed a well chosen cast, headed by Richard Brackhahn, who was the man who came to dinner and stayed for many a day. Sandra Parks played the hostess, delighted at having such an outstanding "lion." Richard Montgomery was Mr. Stanley, who was more than willing to speed the overbearing guest; while Jo Ann Eggeman was most effective as a nerve wracked nurse. Peggy De Rosa and Bill Flaherty pleased as the young Stanleys. Sharon Hasekamp as Maggie and Norman Donner as Bert Jefferson provided the heart interest.

Other interesting characters in this unusually large cast included Harriet Stanley (Nikki Jakovac), the ax woman; Professor Metz (Don Huber), the Cockroach collector; Dr. Bradley (Larry Castle), an author; Lorraine Sheldon (June Shanklin), a movie siren; Banjo (Charles Pitman), an unusual gentleman; and Lord Bottomley (Al Stephan), the usual British lord.

Others in the unusually large cast, all of whom did a fine job, include Donna Prewett, Louis Conrad, Donna Bryant, Judi Sherfield, Jim Morris, Ed Borum, Bob Biggar, Dick Mummert, Jim Ragsdale, Bill Mueller, Willard Zeiser, John Mattingly, David Roehrig, Joe Manley, Ed Wamser, and Vic Thompson.

Also, we must not fail to give credit to the excellent stage management. Those unseen heroes, who did the work behind the scenes, deserve much praise. They contributed greatly to the smashing success of "The Man Who Came to Dinner."
