

Students Adjust to Kindergarten

Kindergarten was a time of anticipation and anxieties. The kindergartner feared being away from home for the first time. However, he was anxious to learn new things and to make new friends. In kindergarten students learned to make letters and numbers. Next, they learned to write sentences, do addition and subtraction, and finally to write stories. They also learned what cooperation was all about. Kindergarten combined just the right amount of work and play. Their games helped them learn.
