

and We Have Discovered

... A new decade. Like all things finite, this year has drawn to an end. But, like love, friendship and courage never ends. Our discoveries did not begin or end with this year. They began when we were born and will continue until we die. What we have achieved is an awareness of what we see and what we hear and of the people around us; an ability to see through the surface to the truth that lies beneath. Within the covers of this book is a record of that achievement and of our successes, our failures, our dreams, fostered and nourished at W.H.S.

Each one came and fused with every other individual, and together we made up a living spirit that brought these brick buildings to life and made Walterboro High a force to be reckoned with and respected — and most of all, loved. The love that has grown in us for our school will not die with our departure, but will forever remain in our hearts, keeping us warm. But even greater, it will enable us to extend warmth, friendship, and love to those we meet in the years to come.

And that is the greatest Discovery of all.
