

Change is the key word used when describing the 1974 annual staff. They changed the size of the yearbook from the old 8½" x 11" to the larger 9" x 12" size, brought in professional photographers to take hundreds of candid pictures in October, introduced an advertising section, wrote historical copy on each of the clubs and activities, expanded the sports section and experimented with the use of color, a variety of picture sizes and shapes, and different layouts.

An attempt was made to present the two schools, Walterboro and Colleton High, in one unified annual, as the staff continued and expanded the coverage of the ninth and tenth grades.

Cassandra Hicks and Pat Dawson were chosen by the '73 staff as Editor and Business Manager. They attended the Keys Yearbook Workshop at Furman in August. Oliver Barnes joined the staff as Sports Editor, while Nathaniel Gant held down the chief photographer's duties. Nathaniel was aided by Jerry Gardner and Joseph Reid.

The annual attempted to utilize the creative abilities of WHS students. Judy Foley, Jerry Gardner and Patricia Middleton drew material for the section dividers. Gerry Walker and Mike Way wrote poetry and prose for the introduction and student life sections.

Kathy Craven, Sherry Varnadoe topped the ad sales crew. Kay Craven, Brenda McMillan, Gail Elkins, Cindy Bennett, Deborah Jackson, Genny Skardon, Nancy Padgett, Ruby Smalls, Charles Cox and others contributed to the advertising campaign.

Bonnie McLaughlin and Ann Burch won free yearbooks for selling over 50 annuals. Ann also worked as activity editor as well as running down information and handling communications with the Colleton staff. Ronnie Coleman persevered in doing many of the other essential jobs. Colleton students Diane Tracy, Jayne Mulligan, Sandy Socha, Mary Barnes, Donna Balish, and Avis Manigo came sixth period two days a week to aid in the Colleton sections.
