That's great! No way! Jim Williams and Wes White express differing opinions about refreshments offered at the special NHS induction reception.

Groups filled the months after midterms with projects and activities. Trying to outrun the rush of research papers and other projects loaded on students at the last of school, groups held many activities in January and February.

The National Honor Society held its induction ceremonies on February 24. This year the new members were kept in suspense until just before their names were announced. Instead of having relatives of inductees witness the opening ceremonies, they were kept in a separate area until just before the list of new members was read. This way, no one knew who was to be inducted until time for the NHS pledge. After the program, old and new members and guests retired to the library for a reception.

The FFA held its annual Talent Show in the gym on January 26. Jean Bishop headed up a small committee to plan the program and they incorporated a fine group of talented students—singers, dancers, dramatists—who worked hard and performed well. Mr. Pendergrass added a special attraction by doing a little vocalizing of his own. Also, at lunch, Lu and the Grooves gave a special concert just for WHS and some of the students really "got down!"
