

I tried! Robert Marvin discusses his design for the proposed student parking lot.

“Complainity” was one of the favorite pastimes at WHS. Among the most often heard complaints were those about the parking spaces (or rather the lack of them), the decrepit condition of the school building, and anything else that seems to warrant a fuss. It would be unfair to assume that this time was wasted since most of the objects of complaints really needed to be discussed.

One of the most talked about problems at WHS was the physical condition of our school. Many jokes have been spread about the number of times our building has been condemned. This wasn't the only object of unhappy students. The condition of the driveways in front and behind the school building was also a frequent subject of discussion.

The lack of parking spaces, which has plagued students since the closure of Strickland Street, was partially alleviated with the clearing of the lot next to the school grounds. This lot is to be levelled and paved eventually for complete student use, but the date of these wonderful renovations is still a mystery to all.

YUK! That was the word for the condition of many of the bathrooms at WHS before the Student Council cleaned them up.

Heave! Cindy White and Sharon McNeil help clean up the lot to be made into a student parking lot.
