

Altogether First Class

The thought of bringing together two schools in a new facility brought doubts to parents, faculty and students that concerned discipline, space and relationships. After all, management of 1746 students would not be an easy job.

Freshmen, as well as Seniors, were learning their way around campus. Friendly smiles and "Where am I?" faces were common sights for the first few weeks of school. From then on, knowing where to go just seemed to come naturally.

Along with a new facility came new changes. Instead of one regular lunch, students could choose from salad bar, regular lunch, short order, and a la carte items. Rules on chewing gum, smoking, driving to vocational school and car stickers were also imposed. "I think that most of the rules are pretty fair, but some are just plain ridiculous!", said sophomore Deborah Campbell.

Through a wide variety of offered courses, a 15,000 volume library, and an extended guidance program, educational opportunities were better than ever. Sophomore Karen Francis said, "Educational opportunities here will make it easier for me to study computer programming when I go to college". During the year, more changes were made through trial and error, and the doubts soon disappeared making the school year A First Class Act.
