

Attorney General Travis Medlock speaks to students.

Joseph Fair hands out pamphlets given to him by Mayor Elton Culpepper.

Present, Past and Future . . . we studied it all.

Lectures from Mayor Elton Culpepper and Attorney General Travis Medlock, visits to court, churches and local historical sites made history more than history, government more than government, and psychology more than psychology.

Social Sciences included history, criminology, sociology, American government, psychology, and civics. All helped prepare students in the areas of human relations.

One special program, Crime Prevention, taught students the seriousness and aftermath of various crimes. Civics instructor Vickie Smith stated, "The program really interested students, their grades even improved."

Even though some students felt that social studies was only taken for the needed units, it helped educate them in getting along better with their fellow man.

Taking notes in Mr. W.K. Dreyer's class are Rhonda Smoak, Maria Grant and Devon Williams.
