

The Lighter Side

Good Plans, Good Times, Go Hand in Hand

Sometimes it seemed as if our lives were filled with plans. Whether we planned for college entrance or the perfect outfit for that one special date we were forever organizing and systematizing. We planned carload trips to Charleston, away football games, and concerts. We organized class trips, a "Putting on the Ritz" prom, and a powderpuff football game. We had slumber parties, campout parties, and just party parties. We managed after school jobs, homework assignments and community involvement. We found time for football practice, shopping sprees, and pigging out while also attending to friends, boyfriends, and family matters. Every hour was found occupied and though we may have timed ourselves to the minute, each minute yielded something productive and memorable, and we held fast for we knew that these moments were fleeting and Our Stamp of Approval would only be given once.
