

A Lesson in Literature

There's nothing exciting about commas and punctuation but some of the English teachers did their best to make learning an exciting experience.

Miss Crawford forfeited her role as English teacher to become Queen of England for a day. This was to more strongly emphasize the state of England during the Elizabethan period. During their study of Shakespeare's "Macbeth", students from Mrs. Bodison, Mrs. George and Mrs. Crawford's classes went to Charleston to see a movie about the play.

Students in the AAP classes were studying Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet". Retiree

Virginia vonLehe rejoined the staff especially to teach the course. A group of students were selected to participate in the program which was incorporated for the first time this year.

Whatever the case, students found that English-Lit was more than just the same old thing.
