

Special Interests

Whenever the routine of school began to get boring, there were programs for a change. These special programs included things to interest almost everyone in the school.

Archie Morgan spoke to the psychology and sociology classes. He was with the Methodist church and Anderson's crisis minority direction. A display of snakes was presented. It taught students many things about snakes. There was a Spanish softball game, too.

Richard Huffstutler shared his experiences with drugs and alcohol and explained how he had found God. God had helped him live a happier life without drugs. He hoped that many other young people would find God as he did.

These special programs gave students a chance to learn things that they might not be taught in classes. They kept school from becoming monotonous.

P.E. teacher Kathy Layton gets a little help from the wall to keep her standing.

