

Variety

The spice of life

Variety was the spice of life—or at least we thought so. We had a variety of friends, a variety of teachers and a variety of classes.

Our variety of teachers had different ways of teaching different subjects. They had to—for we would have perished of boredom.

We had plays, concerts and guest lecturers. We watched beauty pageants, listened to campaign speeches and saw snake presentations.

There was always something going on. If there wasn't a group going on a trip there was a group coming back. If that wasn't the case there was always someone planning a trip.

All of these special activities helped to break the monotonous day-to-day routine, and were often the small highlights of the school year.

Explaining the development of theme to the yearbook staff Colonel Charles Savedge uses his hands for emphasis.

Miriam Belcher is reviewing her test paper in Algebra AAP Class.

