The Trough

Lunchtime was sometimes the best time. The cafeteria served three lunches; long order, short order, and salad bar. There was always a choice. After eating lunch students were supposed to take their trays to "the trough" and empty them. The trough was a good idea for having the students empty their own trays saved the lunchroom workers a lot of time. It wasn't always the most pleasant place to be but one survived through it. Quite a few people liked to avoid the nastiness of "the trough" and managed quite well, in spite of the numerous announcements made by Principal Mack Jones.

Visiting the trough is a dirty job—but somebody has to do it.

A product of avoiding "the trough"—messy trays left on the table.
