

Those Hot Dawgs ...

Were Difficult To Stop

For the Bulldogs, football was an all-year sport. The players started lifting weights in mid-January and continued to lift throughout the summer. When practice started in early August, all the time spent in the weight room proved well-spent.

The team made the annual trip to camp at Erskine College in mid-August. Temperatures soared into the hundreds. "But all the work during camp was worth it at game time," said offensive center John Boozer. After a hard week of practicing and scrimmaging, the players returned to Walterboro only to start practicing again the next Monday.

When school started in late August, players had the added task of fitting homework into their busy schedules. The Bulldogs continued to practice and scrimmage until the first real test of their abilities came in the form of Garrett in the Sertoma Classic. The dogs won the one quarter scrimmage but, according to the fans, they did not play well. The team was not playing up to its fullest capability or its reputation as the reigning lower state champions.

Syl Bowman on a screen pass looks up field for some running room.

Defensive ends Derrick Pinckney and Delma Dennis swarm on the St. Andrews quarterback.

Alphonso Brown closes in on a Georgetown running back.

