DOWNTOWN FACELIFT

The shops and malls of Charleston were very popular places for the high school students. However unconsciously, this move to Charleston was hurting our own home town economy because of a lack of down town business. The merchants met to form a plan of action which was basically a wholesale renovation and renewal of the downtown business district. The plan called for new building facades, awnings, modernization of signs, the repaving of streets and sidewalks, and a park where the old Stripes drugstore had been before it burned.

After the merchants got the basic plan together, they handed it over to the city council and let them organize it from there. In the final agreement the merchants agreed to buy and install the awnings and facades and to pay a $25 fee in order to help the city with the street repairs. Although the 25 dollars paid by each Merchant was a drop in the bucket, it was a help and it showed the city how much they wished to improve the area and it made the people of Walterboro think twice before going to Charleston for something they could get just as easily downtown.
