

Rusty Adams—Biology I
 Charles Akine—Pre Voc. I,II
 Ottie Allen—Math I, Algebra II,
 Calculus A.P.
 Ruth Allgood—Civics, U.S. History
 Jim Andersson—Ass't Principal
 Margaret Barnes—U.S. History

Easter Barnhill—Math
 Frank Barnhill—Ass't Principal
 Marguerite Baumeister—Math I
 Margie Bellinger—Aide
 Alma Benson—Aide
 Janis Blocker—Eng III, IV; Media
 Production

Helen Bodison—Ass't Principal
 James Bodison—Dr. Ed
 Vera Bodison—Eng II
 Ester Bright—Typing I, Gen.
 Business
 Doug Bullock—Math I, Computer
 Science
 Cynthia Carter—Math III, Alg I

Teachers are People Too

Mr. Greg Cranford, an American government teacher as well as a civics teacher, was a good example of the saying that "teachers are people too." While in the classroom, Mr. Cranford liked to get involved with his students. He allowed them to express their views and opinions of current issues.

Mr. Cranford put on skits to help the student better comprehend the meaning beneath the surface of the subject matter. His students felt that he was "more than just a teacher." Kiki Kinard called Mr. Cranford "a trip."

While not in school, Mr. Cranford liked to help out with the activities of the Teen Action Committee. He was a valuable asset in the organization's many weekend dances and other activities.

Mr. Cranford also had his serious side. He was a constant spectator in county council meetings as well as school board meetings. He also encouraged his students to attend these meetings by adding points to the nine-weeks' grade for each meeting attended. Some students earned as many as 24 points over the semester.

Mr. Cranford was an admired figure in school. Tim Simmons called him "the most innovative teacher I have ever experienced."

by Cathi Mizell

Showing his impeccable taste, Mr. Cranford is shown stealing a kiss from the Homecoming Queen, also known as Mr. Jarvis.

