And on

Those young athletes along with other younger students and seniors like Kenny Bowman were the driving force behind the track team's success season. The girls' team was a little different. Although they had more seniors, they also had a strong nucleus for future seasons. This was especially the case with freshman Tamela Copeland. This young runner came only one-tenth of a second from breaking the state record in the 100-meter dash, even with an injured knee. The cross-country team was forced to rely on the determination of twelve underclassmen and the experience of two seniors.

Next season will be a little different for returning track members. The school is building a new track facility next to the high school. For the first time in school history the track teams will hold a home meet. With the addition of the new facility it is hoped that new interest will be generated in the track program. With greater interest and participation the program can only continue to improve in future years.
