

Following the Model

“Did You Ever Know That You’re My Hero?”

From supermodel to supermom, different types of role models could have been found. Most kids had people that they looked up to whether it was a super star or a family member.

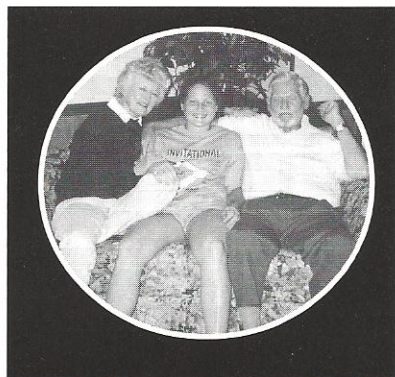

“A role model is someone you can look up to for support and that you can admire,” said Sophomore Jenna Burkett.

Jenna has known her role model, her Aunt Ann, since she was a kid.

“My Aunt Ann is my role model because she is fun to be with and she loves children. We are somewhat alike,” says Jenna.

Role models inspired the people that looked up to them. They also taught lessons without even knowing it.

“My aunt has taught me not to worry about what other people say. She’s different from other’s her age.

She will do anything you want to do like go out on the boat or go touring, or just sit on the dock and watch the birds,” she said.

Role models changed the lives of people because of their morals, beliefs, and opinions that made them different from others.

-Julie McMillan

Friends... Senior Tiffany Headen and her friend, sophomore Heather Craven take a picture of themselves. “Tiffini has always been there for me, and she has her life balanced out when it comes to school, family, friends, and religion,” said Heather.

When I Grow Up.. Before the first day of school starts, Senior Lacy Pulis poses for a picture with her mother. “I look up to her because she has been through a lot and still has a positive outlook on her future,” she said.