

Lending a Hand Through Leadership

*Colleton's
Students Get Involved!*

In the mist of a society falling steadily, community leaders have come up with a solution. They formed a group of juniors and sophomores to undergo training that may someday benefit the community economically and socially.

"YLC has shown me how to be successful in life. When I joined the program, I was nervous, but I'm glad I did. We were involved in a lot of activities that helped to enrich the community," said junior Ashley Ulmer.

Ashley served as a senior board member in Youth Leadership Colleton. She entered a year ago and has continued to, concentrate her efforts to its purpose; to broaden its members horizons, occupationally speaking, and the outlook of this county with the hope that they will return to the community as leaders in the near future.

"I am glad I got the opportunity to take part in this program. My favorite activity has been mentoring the younger students. When I was younger there weren't many teenagers to look up to," said Ashley.

In addition to its Save Our Children tutoring project, the students visited the State House, toured medical and industrial facilities, and took part in the activities. The program has changed their lives and instilled in them a lasting desire to make the necessary changes to improve their county's economy.
