

TAKE CHARGE

It's how you play the game.

In a military organization, ultimately one man assumes a position of responsibility and other individuals are relegated to lesser positions of authority. As the military review concludes, the battalion commander directs his companies to an area for dismissal and instructs his subordinates to take charge of their organizations. Just so, a single individual captains an athletic team and calls and directs play; however, on sports fields and courts every member awaits his chance to take charge of the immediate situation, to complete a play, the burden of team accomplishment at least momentarily upon him.

Team sport at CMA is a major activity. Intermural play includes football, cross country, soccer, basketball, track and field, and baseball. Intramural sports action, an integral part of CMA's twice weekly physical fitness program, offers swimming, tennis, basketball, softball, volleyball, and even horseback riding. With a program as broadly based as this, every student has his opportunity to test his physical prowess, to develop and practice good sportsmanship, and to "take charge."
