

FOREWORD

In this, the second volume of the REBEL, we, the staff, will endeavor to present to our reader a pictorial representation of a typical year at Carlisle.

You, the men of Carlisle, hail from all sections of the American continent; from the far-away West coast, east to the rock-bound shores of New England, and south to Florida; even Cuba and Puerto Rico. As can be readily seen the assembling of these men has an educational advantage in itself, for by working and playing in concert, that invaluable sense of cooperation which is necessary in order that we live successfully together is instilled in each and every member of the corps.

To the average cadet the year consists of three distinct phases—Autumn, Winter, and Spring—separated by the long-awaited, few, and far between furloughs. With this in mind it is our intention to reveal that which takes place during each of these three phases.

Years from now, after all has been decided, although you may not know the whereabouts of your classmates, the successes they have reached, nor the ambitions they have fulfilled, you will have this, the '44 REBEL, as a guide to lead you back in thought through the years to relive and recapture the life you knew as a cadet.
