When we enter Carlisle our parents entrust the faculty with the most important task known to mankind: the education of their children. Upon their competent shoulders rests the responsibility of training the men of tomorrow, so that they may have able minds with which to mold a better world.

After arriving at Carlisle, a cadet soon realizes that the faculty members are not instructors alone, but sympathetic and understanding friends who will gladly listen to any individual problem, and do their utmost to help him find a solution. They also greatly influence in the cadet's mind the need for friendship and cooperation with his fellow man.

We, the Cadet Corps of '54 wish to have this opportunity to express our deepest thanks and appreciation to you, our faculty, for the splendid scholastic and character-molding instruction which you have rendered.
