

Look Into the Future

Thunderbolt Career and Technology Center

A little weary of taking down his creation masonry student junior Joshua James was still able to take pride in a job well done. "I like the instant gratification of building something because I get to actually see it completed," Joshua said.

The vocational school, although technically a part of the high school, was viewed as a relief from all the hustle and bustle of the high school.

TCTC not only offered hands on experience and training, but valuable lessons for life. Sophomore Lakevia Williams who aspired to be a gynecologist said, "I learned to do the best I can do and apply myself."

From job shadowing to building cabinets to managing ledgers, the students took part in various hands on experiences.

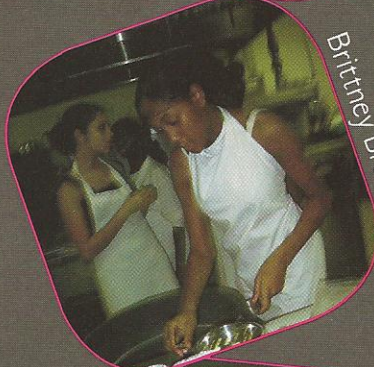

The surprising amount of content with TCTC remained ever increasing along with its many accolades and recommendations. "I would recommend others to attend TCTC because it is a fun experience," junior Amber Loe said.

Brittney Williams

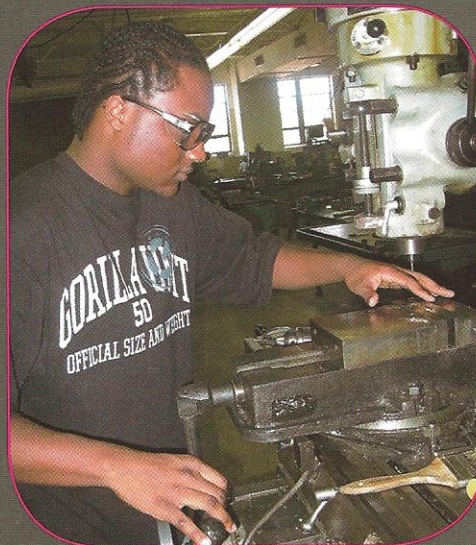

Lakevia Williams

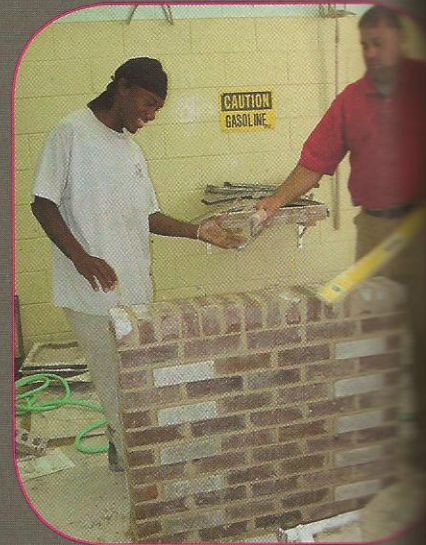

Brittney Brown

Megan Gilbert

Appreciative of the lessons he's learned one senior had no qualms about recommending TCTC to other students. "I would recommend other to attend TCTC because it is a good experience," senior Samuel Crosby said.

Despite the simmering excitement masonry student senior Timothy Hamilton was a little apprehensive about the up coming 2007 Masonry Competition. "I'm a little nervous but I am ready," Timothy said.