1. Despite the slightly diverse electives offered, junior Callie O'Connor, like many other students, thought there was room for improvement. "I would like a photography class and something with water sports," Callie said.

2. Foreign exchange student, senior Myra Alvarez was appreciative for the lessons learned in her psychology class, but even more so for her kind and helpful classmates. "The people in the class were very helpful," Myra said.

3. Even though construction wasn't his intended field, Georgio Washington still enjoyed his experiences in Intro to Building Construction. "We learned to build a lot of things and install some electric systems," Georgio said.

The video class was a prelude to sophomore Logan O'Quinn's future career. "I want to be a producer. When I am in this class I feel like I'm working in my field," Logan said.

Senior Charles McCarter viewed video on a deeper level. "I like video production because I can manipulate shots and capture angles. It's like you're capturing a moment in time," Charles said.
