

1. Racing to make it to the finish line, Victoria Andrews worked it out to reach the end.

2. Making his way to the end of the road, Richard Lyons takes it easy as he makes it to the finish line.

3. Keeping his head in the competition, Jabari Holloway makes his way around his opponent.

4. Soaring in the wind, Hannah Ruegner makes her way around the course.

5. Pacing herself so she won't tire out, senior Annie Gregory fights to be the first to cross the finish line.

6. Fighting to push ahead, Morgan Glover strives to do her best as she races around the track. "It was fun and hard at the same time, but I enjoyed it," junior Morgan Glover said.

Runnin' Wild

Endurance pumping and adrenaline on high the cross country team ran their way to an outstanding season. "We had a great season," Coach Smith said.

Running cross country not only requires skills but also endurance. Players competed to complete a course over open and sometimes rough terrain.

Although cross country may have its perks there are some moments when you just want to give up and give in. Exhausting practices and tiring workouts for days at a time can sometimes wear a player out. But resisting pressure and the temptation of quitting the cross country team has managed to come out on top.

And

They're

Off
