A simple gift.

Waiting on her phone to be repaired, junior Elizabeth Pangalangan defined homework. "The school gives us homework to help us review for the materials we learned that day. I think we receive a fair amount, but some days it can get hectic and pile up, but I manage," Elizabeth said.

Elizabeth's Friends!

Enjoying lunch, junior Chelsea Blake gave her idea on the best excuse to give a teacher as to why she did not hand in her homework. "I meant to do it, but my daddy the preacher said it was against the Bible," junior Chelsea said.

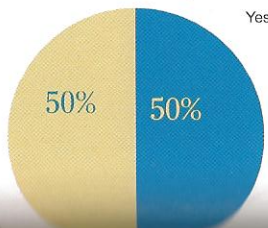

After school, senior Benjamin Gaddy typed on the computer to finish his work. "On a scale of 1 to 10, I would give homework about a 3 or 4. It's not as important as the original curriculum. Learning in class is more important," senior Benjamin said.

So Your Dog Ate It?

All students had forgotten about it once or twice. It didn't go away though. It never goes away. It haunted them when we tried not to think about it. The nagging feeling they were missing something, something that "they" told the student would make us happy. But it never made them happy, it only left us to wonder, why didn't we finish our homework?
