

Bottle the Buzz

The BluePrint is a great way to get the students of CCHS information about the events taking place around the school. The 2012-13 Newspaper Staff worked really hard to provide the students with accurate information. Editor Emily Stone says, "I think that BluePrint is better this year." The newspaper is a great way to get to know the people in the school and develop writing skills. "I want to be a novelist, so I believe that working on the newspaper will help me in that career choice," said junior Shyann Donoho. The BluePrint staff published the information they believed the students needed to, or wanted to know about. The BluePrint will always be rolling out the information, events, and feature articles, so be on the lookout for the next edition and see what you can learn.

3.

4.

3. Mrs. Cable assigns articles for the upcoming issues.

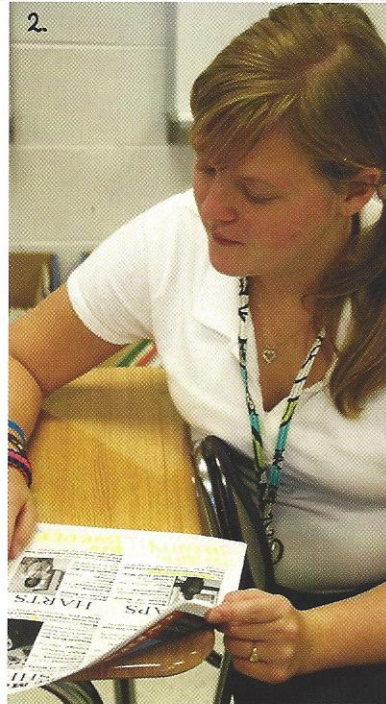

4. Junior Shyann Donoho and senior Joshua King listen intently to the article assignments for the December issue.

5. Senior Shelby Peters waits for a shock of inspiration so she can begin her article.

1.

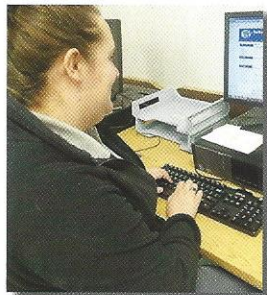

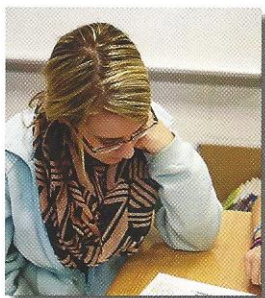

1. Second semester members of the newspaper staff discuss topics to cover in the upcoming February issue.

2.

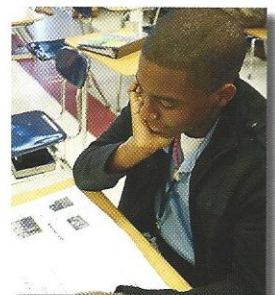

2. Editor in chief, junior Emily Stone, goes through a finished issue of the BluePrint and makes notes for improvement for the next issue.

Senior Ashley Lambert discusses the final outcome of the finished October issue with her editor.

"Newspaper helped me meet a lot of new people," says senior Carrie Cook. Carrie enjoyed the time spent improving her writing.

Junior Gracie Bowles pays close attention as Emily Stone, editor in chief, gives a lecture on proofreading.

Junior Raymond Burke reviews the last issue to help improve the upcoming issue. Students were expected to reflect on their successes and mistakes.