

CHORUS

Through a strong, family-like environment, Chorus members are able to confidently learn and perform music under the direction of Chorus teacher Mrs. Stephanie Drawdy.

Chorus is a class dedicated to developing the musical abilities of CCHS students. Mrs. Stephanie Drawdy teaches her choir the techniques of the art form, letting students develop their talent and build confidence through music. Drawdy instructs her students at different levels as they progress through the program. Silvernotes, the first and more basic level of the two, is more focused on the in-and-outs of music. Students learn about the principles of written music: the notes and symbols and how to use them. Singers are the more advanced class of the two, requiring an audition to get in. Leaving the basics of the Silvernotes class behind, Singers take music head-on as artists. Despite the differences, both classes have the same central goal—to be expressive through music and performance.

(Below) Chorus members patiently wait for their cue to go on the field and perform. The pregame show is one of the group's first opportunities of each to shine before the school and community.

(Below) Dalton Moore (11), Joshua Jones (11), Andrew Cook (9), and Lance Calcutt (11) stand in formation, preparing to sing with all their might. Once the pregame show is finished, Calcutt takes on his other role of the night as the football team's kicker.

At Homecoming, the Colleton County Chorus gave an inspirational show to kick off an amazing night.

Acting as conductors, Seniors Ethan Bennett, Gracie Pierce, and Rachel Dandridge (right) lead the choir through the performances of The National Anthem as well as the CCHS Alma Mater before the start of the Homecoming football game.
