

S Hard work pays off in top honors

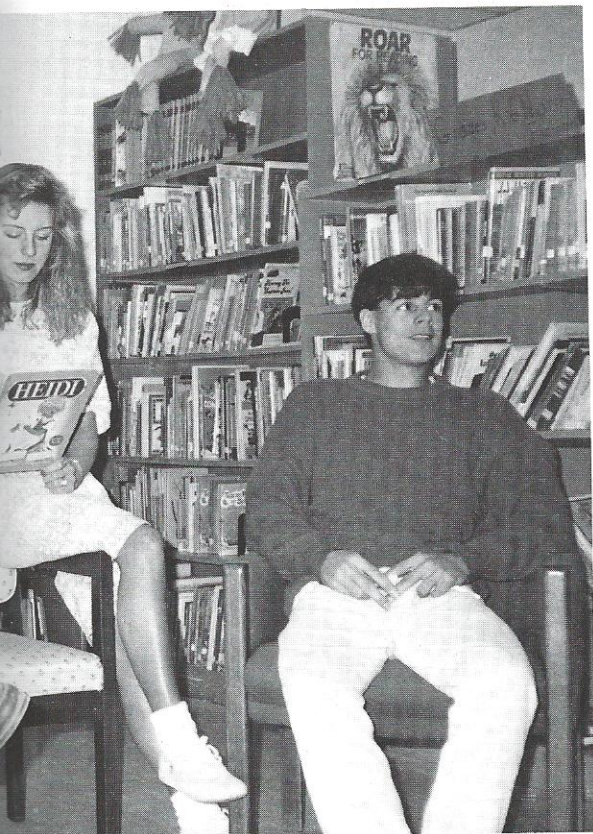

ECOND TO NONE!!

"Second to None" is perhaps the only way to describe the special people of Colleton Preparatory Academy. These students have been recognized for their achievements both academically and athletically. These chosen students gave up what little spare time they had, or even part of their summer vacation to participate in a variety of activities. Many attended workshops or camps during the summer. Others gave their time after school.

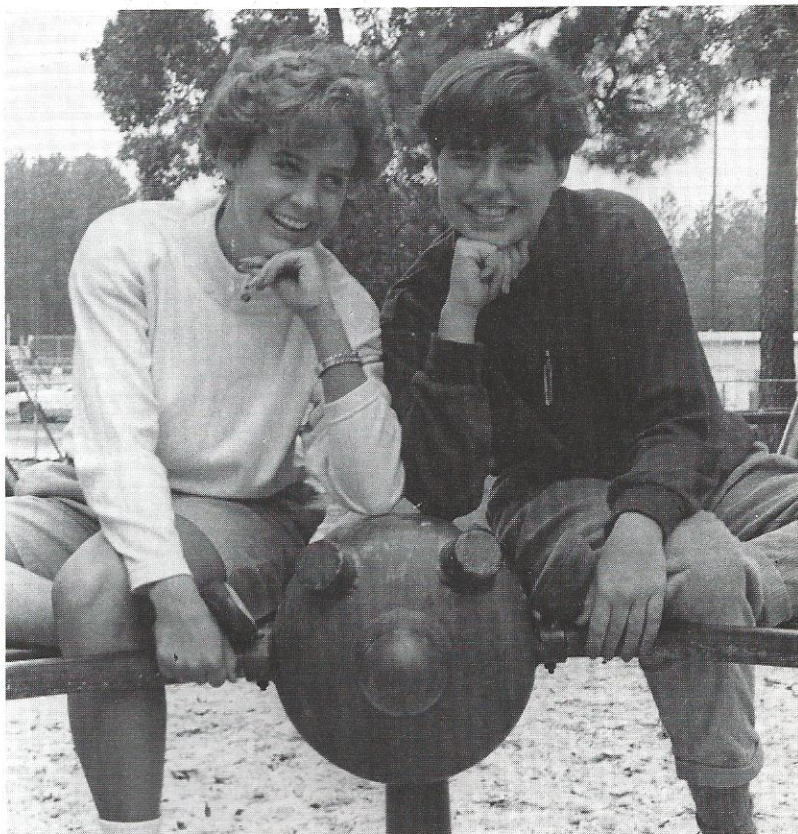

Involved is an adjective that aptly describes all students attending CPA, but, these students have gained top honors through extra hard work. They demonstrated quality, leadership, and excellence that exemplify the very best of the best here at CPA. One such student, Marnie Amerson, attended Teen Institute. When asked what she learned while attending, Marnie replied, "I never realized so many people shared my feelings against drugs."

Teen Institute students learn about drug and alcohol prevention

Teen Institute sponsored by Alcohol and Drug Abuse of S.C. was held at Presbyterian College on June 17-23. The major goal of the week was to discuss prevention of drug and alcohol abuse. Students attended many classes as well as participated in discussions.

Asher Howell, Allison Goehring, Michelle Woodard, and Edward Oswald, attended Boys' and Girls' State, which were held at the Citadel and USC respectively.

Why are Shelley White and Holly Davenport smiling so proudly? They were chosen to attend the Leadership Conference at Columbia College in June.
