Honor students lead the way for N.H.S. and academic bowl

STRIVING FOR EXCELLENCE

Intelligence, character, and leadership are just a few of the qualities needed for membership in the National Honor Society. Becoming a member of the N.H.S. is on the minds of all Juniors and Seniors, but only a few achieve these high standards. In the spring of 1990 many Juniors were inducted into the National Honor Society. These students must meet the requirements of maintaining a B average and participating in school activities. As members they pledge to be loyal to their school, support the high standards of the N.H.S. and provide assistance to the school when needed. The Juniors were inducted into the organization during a candlelight ceremony in the gym. A reception was held in the library. Parents were invited to share this important event with the students.

Another organization that required intelligence and quick thinking was the academic team. It was open to anyone interested in grades 9-12. The team met during lunch twice a week and practiced answering questions quickly and accurately.

Only the best of the best can compete in the academic competition

Before a competition certain members of the academic team were chosen to be the representatives for the subjects of Math, English, Science, and History. Selections were made based on the accuracy with which they answered question.

During a very solemn and quiet ceremony, new members Shane Walker, Livia Persky, and Edward Oswald recite the N.H.S. oath.

The few, the proud, the N.H.S. members: Allison Goehring, Shane Walker, Tim Godwin, Drew Brightwell, Michelle Woodard, Edward Oswald, Livia Persky, Everette Bootle.
