

One Last Trip

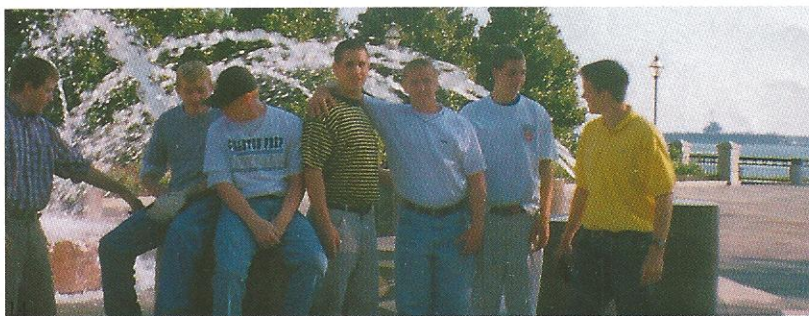

On September 24th, the small class of 19 Seniors took what would probably be their last field trip together. But this was no ordinary field trip. There were no trips to the same old museum, no lectures given, and no agonizingly long ride on the WarHawk Activity Bus, This was Senior Picture Day. First stop was Waterfront Park where the Seniors stood around, and looked cool for the camera. From there they headed to Q-Zar. There they did laser-battle with one another and generally had a good time (and got pretty sweaty). After eating they all headed back with a few more memories to keep forever.

Amy and Mary-Margaret take a little time to enjoy the peace during their trip. (And do a little personal grooming)

After the long ride to Charleston, the park was a refreshing relief for Brent, Riley, and Corey. Meanwhile, Oystein contemplates this strange American custom.

Amy and Mills spend a little time in the Q-Zar Arcade discussing the more technical aspects of basketball. Amy might actually go to one of the games this year.

The Senior guys pose for one more picture at the park. Tommy and David are caught off guard and forget to suck in their bellies. Duncan and Corey bicker over who's taking up more space. Mills and Oystein share a knowing look: "Only four more hours till we can hit the basketball court."
