

I can't believe eighteen years of our lives are gone, but those years are filled with lots of memories. It seems like not so long ago I brought you home from the hospital. The first night I was wishing those big blue saucers would close so I could get some sleep. You were such a good baby. When you were a toddler, we stayed up late at night watching horror movies. I never thought you would outgrow that teenage, "know-it-all" mouthy age. I am so glad that didn't last long. You were always so independent, sometimes it was scary, but I knew it was part of who you are and who you have become in life, and you will be successful. You grew into a beautiful, loving, caring, and intelligent young lady that I am very proud of. A mother couldn't be prouder of their daughter than I am of you. In my heart, you will always be my little girl, I will always be a mother and a friend when you need me, my love for you is unconditional. You can achieve all that you want in life, because you have what it takes to make it. I hope your memories will all be good ones and your plans and dreams all come true. Reach for the sky!

We all love you very much,
Mom, Dad, & Trey
