

Best Of Times

In 1981, a group of ninth graders entered high school to spend four years they would never forget. In 1985, these same students were able to look back as Seniors and cherish the memories. The Class of '85 started as underclassmen who were uncertain of the years to come and worked their way up to being Seniors.

The Seniors were faced with many decisions in 1985. The uncertainty felt during the early years of high school emerged once again as the students began choosing colleges. Responsibility required to make these decisions was prevalent in each person. The time of being confused had come and gone, and the students handled their choices well. Being Seniors required a lot of the Class of '85, and they met the challenge with real maturity.

Shan Pye shows that a senior can "monkey" around just as much as a first grader.
