

Caught In The Middle

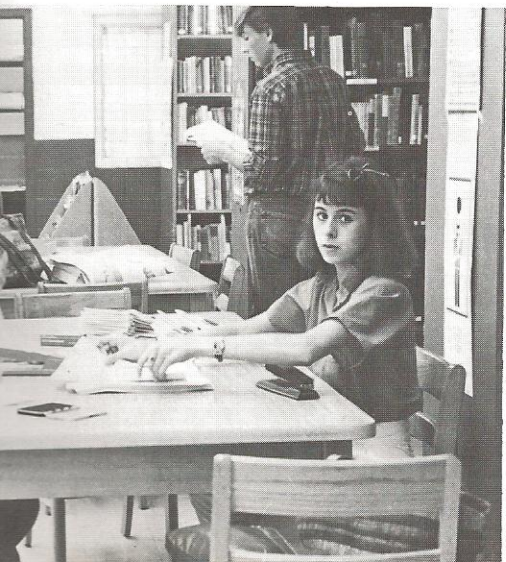

“Middle of the road” best described the sophomores. They were not yet distinguished upperclassmen and they no longer shared in the spotlight of attention that the freshmen enjoyed. The sophomores were just “there”. They were only extra faces in the halls, more voices at pep rallies. Although they faded into the background of halls, lockers, and classes, sophomores made their mark on John C. It was a difficult year, but they had better things ahead to think about.

The newness and initial excitement of high school had long worn off and these students used their experience from a year of the “freshmen struggles” to get their lives organized. The Class of 1989 learned to budget their time, becoming more active members in clubs and organizations. Even with their increased extra-curricular activities, the sophomores still achieved high grades, perhaps even with a little less study time.

A sophomore's work is never done! This is true especially for the class officers: Kevin Beach, J.J. Evans, Christy Steele, and Emily Warren.

Study hall is so exciting! Todd Fennell tries to contain his amazement while Kevin Beach gives some juicy gossip.

These library aids deserve a hand! Amy Gentry, Lisa Rodgers, and Toni Wilson give up their spare time to staple programs.
