

OVERFLOWING SPIRIT

To be a Varsity cheerleader, you have to have spirit energy, time and more spirit. This year's squad had all of this plus more.

For the third straight year, the squad returned home from camp in the summer with camp championship. Unlike past years, they had to beat out several co-ed squads that were among the thirty public and private squads there. One of the co-ed squads was advisor Laura Spears' high school alma matar.

Although few people realize the fact, the varsity cheerleaders spent many long hours practicing, painting posters, planning pep rallies, and raising school spirit. They gave up their spare time to cheer their team to victory whether rain or shine.

With only one senior on the squad, nine of this year's squad could be on the squad next year to carry on the winning tradition. Although it may look easy, this can only be accomplished through hard work, long hours, dedication, and most of all, lots of energy.

With smiles in place, the cheerleaders demonstrate their award winning form that brought them and the school a third straight camp championship.

When cheering, the squad must also keep track of the excitement of the game.

Cheering isn't all hard work. Allyson Haynes and Caroline Linder get to decorate Chris Rowe's face with paint at the pep rally.
