

Looking ahead

One more year has past by. There was no more need to study, but there was a need to plan; plan the events that would take place in the near future.

The pressures didn't end with school. Graduated seniors faced the terrifying yet, exciting world of college. Sheets, towels, clothes and much more had to be bought before the end of summer. Pencils, lunch boxes, and compositions were needed for newcoming kindergarteners. Upcoming juniors had to plan out their fund raising activities. The new seniors prepared for their last and final year of high school. Athletes trained to keep in shape for summer camp. Even teachers spent most of their summer at school getting ready for the new year.

It was a time to look ahead and prepare for a stable future, for the future would soon become the present.

Ashley Hudson examines the canteen food to see if it is eatable.

Do you really think all these seniors know how to play golf? You're right, they don't. Actually, they just enjoy riding the golfcart.

Come on, don't be shy. Drew Brightwell refuses to have his picture made.
