Dedication and Foreword

The modern secondary school in the complex civilization of the space age is called upon to fulfill many functions. High school students must be enabled to adjust to the manifold requirements of society. Driver education teaches them important physical and mental skills and attitudes. Social events are properly sponsored by the high school to produce well-rounded citizens. But the primary duty of the secondary school is still the preparation of young men and women for their ultimate places in society. For this reason, the 1959 Roundup theme is Careers.

Today's technology has made the choice of a career infinitely more difficult than it was a generation ago. To meet this difficulty, the counseling function of the high schools has become increasingly important. At Southwest, our students have the rare good fortune to be assisted by this extremely able and understanding group of people. To them, our counselors, this career issue of the Roundup is dedicated.
