

"Who is that boy?"

"Haven't you heard? That's Niels Bo Poulsen. He's a student from Denmark; he'll be here all year!"

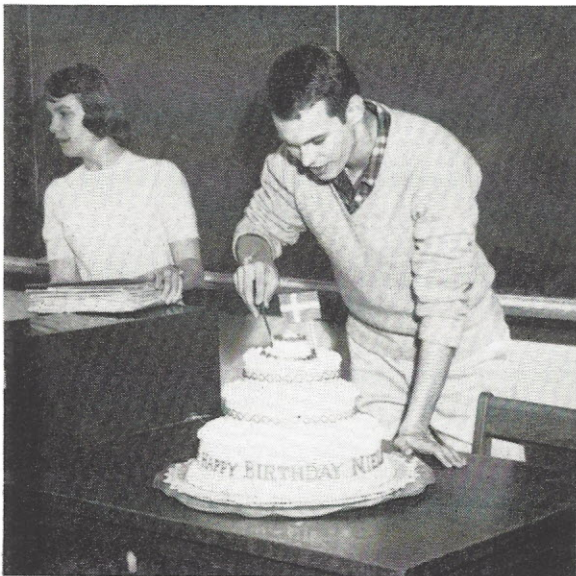

"All year? That's terrific!"

These questions and answers were flying thick and fast as Websterites caught their first glimpse of Niels last September. He had come from Naestved, Denmark, where he lives with his father, a doctor, his mother, and two sisters. In Naestved Niels attends the gymnasium, or high school, where he is taking the "science direction." This entails physics, biology, chemistry, and all kinds of math; but Niels has also studied Swedish, German, French, Italian, Latin, English, and most certainly Danish.

The Danish gymnasium has few extracurricular activities, so Niels has plenty of time to devote to his favorite sport, dancing. Dancing is a true sport in Denmark, for it is a competitive enjoyment, as well as a purely social one. Last year Niels and his partner took part in the national Danish dancing competitions. Tennis and tea also hold top positions on his list of favorites.

In the summertime Niels lives in paradise, or at least what would seem like paradise to us. His home has a fjord on one side and the ocean on the other.

Niels, thank you for being in Webster, and know that from now on you may have a steady stream of Americans knocking on the door of that summer home.
