

The Echo

"Buy candy!" and "You must own a Turkey Day button!" were the two plaintive cries uttered most often by Echo staff members in the fall of '59. By New Year's Eve the words had changed to "Deadline in three weeks!" but the tone was the same: desperate. Now, at the end of what has seemed to be a grueling year, we see that these worries were unfounded because the members of the yearbook staff have pulled through the sales and the parties, and even through the deadlines and the Coronation in fine shape. As a result of the work and the laughter and the tears these thirty smiling faces (with the aid of one undaunted advisor) are now able to present The Echo of 1960.

This book is brand new; it's just off the press. It tells of student life at Webster High during the past year, and to those who participated in this life, every moment has been new and different. In this book these things have been recorded. It is hoped that through The Echo of 1960 they will be remembered.
